

SELF INTRODUCTION

In the world today who we call our heroes have to have names of the African with white names inclined to them. Examples like Toni Morrison is a black American and the first African to win the Nobel prize in literature, Wilma Rudolph the black American sprinter who won in the 1960 's. Slave trade seems to be a continuous process that we face on a daily basis. Although this time around is an advanced process where the best in the land is deported to the white man's land together with their family and everyone, they wish to carry with them. Our own Katherine Johnson, a Nigerian mathematician worked as NASA employee and brought success to US spaceflight. This makes me wonder who fights for the black African girl if our bests go to the white and empowers the white and their generation.

My heart is in pains especially after celebrating our lost leader, Dedan Kimaathi who was killed and died prematurely for better us, but instead we pay back by spitting into his grave by us not honoring his struggle. Many of our young promising minds, go abroad and they waste their best years there, many doing demeaning jobs just to brag that they are abroad. On their return only their ascent and fake tales is what they carry. What was the essence of independence and truly we do not have any. The truth is that not all eggs are rotten. There are Our Kenyan heroes like the late Wangari Maathai(Nobel prize peace winner), who has gone to the white mans land and came back to inspire us, to be the best of ourselves and maintaining our environment.

Do we have to go abroad so that we can have the best titles in the land and mainly we are given the white mans title. My name is Irene Munjiru, a black African girl whose heart bleeds for African's girl justice. Will you help me?
